Finding a Job in the UK

- The way in which you apply for jobs in the UK may be different from your home country. Some companies have a yearly recruitment cycle with closing dates for applications before Christmas for jobs starting the following summer. This means that you need to make applications at the beginning of the academic year in which you intend graduating.
- The UK Curriculum Vitae (CV) is usually no longer than two sides of A4. It should be accompanied by a covering letter, which indicates the job for which you are applying and your reasons for applying to it. See: <https://advice.employability.ulster.ac.uk/cvbuilder>
- It is not usual to send copies of references, certificates, or visas with your CV.
- About 40% of jobs are open to graduates of any discipline and employers are not necessarily looking for subject knowledge when they recruit you.
- You should give evidence of experiences and skills such as teamwork and leadership. It is expected that students will have been involved in activities outside their educational studies.
- Being modest about achievements, abilities & skills may prevent you from succeeding in applications. Be specific about what you have achieved, the abilities and skills you have developed and also your potential for further personal and professional development.
